Philippe de Rothschild and Pauline Potter came to dinner with us tonight and we had a [redacted] pleasant time. Philippe, [redacted] a man of many interests and talents, thinks [redacted] the Community of Six programs constitute the only hope of France retaining its place as a considerable power. He said that after his father's death he had offered the Chateau de la Muette (which is just behind our house) to the U. S. Government, at a ridiculously low price, for use as an Embassy residence. Caffrey rejected it and later it was acquired by OEEC. It is a magnificent property and would have suited our Government as the Ambassador's residence.
